Presenter: Susan McGroarty, Ph.D., ABPP, is the Director of Behavioral Medicine at Inspira Health Network in Woodbury, NJ, specializing in Integrated Healthcare with special expertise in Complex Trauma and Human Diversity. Prior to joining Inspira, Dr. McGroarty was a tenured Associate Professor of Psychology in the PsyD program at Chestnut Hill College. She has written articles and given numerous presentations on topics related to trauma and diversity and has served as Co-chair, Chair, and invited member for regional and national psychological organizations. An ardent advocate of human rights, Dr. McGroarty mentored the development of a Human Rights Forum in the doctoral program which was recognized at the APA Convention in 2014. Dr. McGroarty maintains a small private practice in Haddonfield, NJ

Purpose: Development and maintenance of our multicultural competence is an APA ethical mandate. Researchers have identified recent changes in how multicultural issues are discussed and addressed in both real time and via social media. These changes can seem overwhelming to busy educators/clinicians and set up the possibility of “diversity burnout”. Using a PowerPoint slideshow and experiential activities, this presentation will outline current challenges, review ethical principles and present some suggestions for maintaining and developing cultural competence. The facilitated discussion will integrate findings from the literature. Participant will be presented with a rubric for preventing diversity burnout.

Objectives: As a result of this interactive workshop, participants will be able to:

- Identify two challenges to maintaining cultural competence
- Identify common responses to diversity challenges
- Commit to one area of personal growth in diversity competence

Credits Offered:

- NBCC: 3.5
- Psychology Credits: 3.5
- SW, MFT & PC: 3.5
