Dear Rehabilitation Hiring Manager,

I am writing this letter in reference to Taylor Hunt, who is soon to be a graduate of the Master's Program in Speech-Language Pathology at Bloomsburg University. I had the pleasure of both instructing Taylor in class, and of supervising her in Clinic. She is an exceptional individual who already possesses a steadfast foundation of professional knowledge and clinical expertise, and I know she will continue to grow as an independent clinician.

Taylor is astute in theoretical aspects of communication disorders. She is thoughtful and always approaches tasks and problems by reflecting on the application of current information and research-based findings. She is able to move far beyond simple memorization, and frequently led peers to problem solve using critical application of the most new or novel ideas. Taylor will surely continue her desire to be aligned with cutting edge study in the profession, and has already shown that she can integrate that knowledge to be used in functional uses.

As a clinician, Taylor exudes a natural synergy of skill and know-how that is seldom seen in fledgling professionals. She will never miss an opportunity to watch and to learn, and has typically searched for new and varied experiences to broaden her scope. Her interactions with all types of clients allowed even the most challenging needs to be addressed systematically through true perspective taking and adaptability. During supervisory meetings, her attention and interest was mirrored in a posture of confidence and curiosity. These entwined with the personality of a true leader allowed clients to continue to move ahead in progress for best communication.

Taylor's competence and confidence as a new clinician have her poised at a unique position. She is not only ready to learn more, but she is already ready and able to be an active benefit to any facility she serves. It is without hesitation that I recommend Taylor for a position as a Speech-Language Pathologist.

Sincerely,

Jennifer M., Alberti, M.S., CCC-SLP
