RE: Prevention Education Specialist

As an interdisciplinary public health specialist, I've had a front seat to the rapidly evolving health and social services fields. During my most recent tenure with the Robert Larner, M.D. College of Medicine at the University of Vermont, I've been proud to create and present cutting-edge research and lessons for graduate students of the Master of Public Health program. Utilizing my extensive industry knowledge and experience, I developed outreach and engagement materials and delivered persuasive presentations on critical social service issues. My experience with non-profit organizations, community networking, public education, and working with after-school programs fuel my desire to tackle challenges facing the community today and in the future.

Given my expertise working at the intersection of coordination, engagement, data collection and statistics, and experience working with diverse populations, I am confident I have the talent required to take the Prevention Education Specialist position to the next level.

As your Prevention Education Specialist, I will:

- Call upon my knowledge and demonstrated success in community networking, public education, and community collaborations using tools such as outreach and engagement, cultivating relationships, professionalism, and excellent communication skills working with diverse populations.
- Embrace the challenge of building new, trusted, and meaningful relationships.
- Energize and motivate internal and external stakeholders to support and expand current programs to help CORA Services succeed and the community thrive.
- Maximize strategies and outcomes of the organization in order to assist children, youth and families experiencing emotional, academic and social challenges which impede their development and productivity.
- Thrive, translate, and communicate the voice, values, and vision of CORA Services.

Public health and social services should be effective, accessible, and affordable. Awareness of and access to community resources can have a tremendous impact on our health, wellness, development, and productivity. Working to protect, educate, and engage children and their families is motivating and incredibly rewarding. I am encouraged and inspired by the work of CORA Services and welcome the opportunity to be part of your team.

Best Regards,

Elizabeth A. Scoles, MPH
